

Young entrepreneurs set up stalls in Victoria for a day

Cardinal Place in Victoria, London, saw a pop-up market take place for one day only, run by young people who have taken part in The Prince's Trust Enterprise programme.

A group of talented young entrepreneurs descended on Cardinal Place to sell their wares for one day only.

The young people came from across the capital and south east, and were selling everything from handmade ceramics to natural skin care products and handmade jewellery.

Each of the young people at this unique and vibrant event set up their businesses with help and support from The Prince's Trust. This was just one of a series of events this year that is being organised by Land Securities to raise money for the The Prince's Trust. It comes just days before The Sunday Strut, a charity walk with a twist that will take London by storm.

Ronke Ige, a young person from Greenwich who completed The Prince's Trust Enterprise programme commented:

"It's been fantastic being a part of the pop-up market in Victoria today, and I'd like to thank Land Securities for this great venue. I was in a really difficult situation a couple of years ago and will always be grateful to The Prince's Trust for providing me with the support I needed to get my business up and running.

Thanks to the The Prince's Trust I'm lucky enough to manage a business I'm passionate about and I feel proud that I'm setting a good example to my daughter and other young people.
